I think the same holds good of these poems - apart from their author - which is as poem lucid concerning Buddies - ~~that they~~ (+)

The casual fact is that the actual attitude of the Portuguese soul is extraordinary like the Elizabethan one. This may seem strange to you who, I dare guess, never have conceived it possible that one of present day Portugal anything great might come, and perhaps still like that the Lusiadas is the greatest poem in the Portuguese language, which might have been true before the publication of Patria, in 1898, but is so in †.

~~I am considering of the As The~~ conclusion of the four poems I shown it you will find an extract from a large poem, concluded in somewhat extraordinary language. This is to give some clue of the kind of poetry that is long written in Portugal nowadays.
