

Epigram:
XIX.

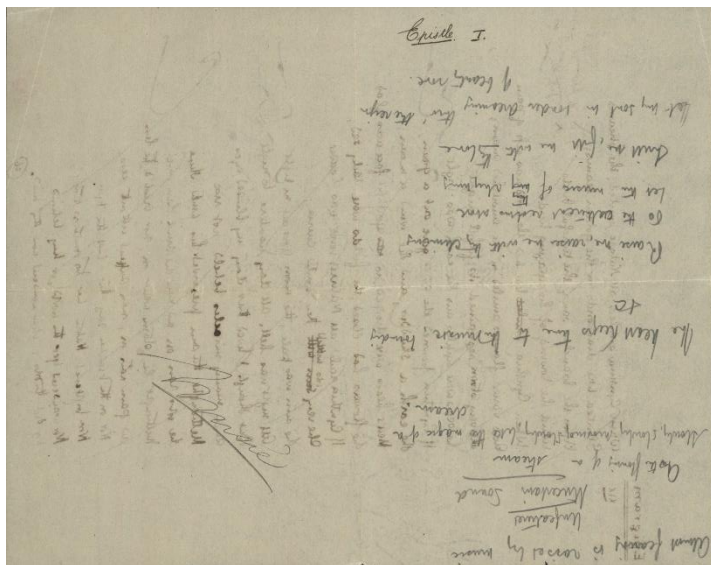

When Cynthia smiled, all Nature smiled, the streams
 Glistened like diamonds in the golden beams;
 Upon the branches sang the tuneful birds, ~~↔~~ both these are Sapphics, change accent
 Amid the lowing of the grazing herds.
 When Cynthia smiled laughed the world was reft of pain
 And varied flowers smiled on the enwitched swain;
 The very storm restrained its fitful might,
 The seas were ripples and the earth was bright.
 If Cynthia frowned the skies gave out a groan, — Copied
 The earth a shudder, and the wind a moan;
 Men's heads were drooped, no youthful face was glad,
 The flowers had closed, the fields were daily sad.
 If Cynthia railed all Nature's voice was hoarse,
 The very Sun with orbs withheld their wanted course;
 The sun was pale, the moon gave out no light,
 All night was hell, all day was like to night.
 But, though I lived that day, my blinded eyes
 Such many miracles beheld not rise.
 Methought the sun preserved his wonted shine — Copied
 The orbs roar on and men did drunk their wine And that men were, as ever, undivine,
 Methought the storm went on, nor crash'd the loss
 And pain roar on, men suffering without cess,
 Nor on the branches sang the birds the more
 Nor brightened Nature her too bounteous store,
 Nor wandered yet the world, or hung behind,
 Nor did the orbs; what wandered was thy mind.

Epistle. I.

Almost fearing is raised my music

Unfeatured

Uncertain Sound

As the flowing of a {...} stream

Slowly, slowly, moving slowly, like the magic of a dream

The heart keeps tune to the music bounding

Etc.

Raise me, raise me with thy chiming

To the aethereal realms above

Let the music of ~~my~~ thy rhyming

Thrill me, fill me with thy lone

Let my soul in wonder dreaming thro' the reign of beauty rove.

Nonsense
