The Unnatural and the Strange

The unnatural and the strange
Have a perfume of their own
Full of the constancy in change,
Of the smile at heart a groan:
The unnatural and the strange
Have a perfume of their own.

Flowers are they in a vase
Of no human workmanship,
The unnatural that dismays
And the strange strong as a whip:
Flowers are they in a vase
Of no human workmanship.

They have the scent of troubled peace,
Of disturbèd halls of joy,
This the scent they have, which is
A thing half to sting and cloy:
They have the scent of troubled peace
Of disturbèd halls of joy.

The Unnatural and the Strange - 2.

The unnatural and the strange
Have a perfume of their own -
That of human flesh, of change
Made corruption without moan:
The unnatural and the strange
Have a perfume of their own.
